Fund Manager Comments

The past year has been defined most prominently by a sharp increase in nationalist and populist rhetoric in a number of developed countries. The US presidential election ultimately saw an emboldened Donald Trump emerge victorious in a blow to globalisation and international trade, while reinvigorating short term nominal GDP growth expectations in the world's largest economy. In the UK, citizens voted to leave the European Union, effectively rejecting the trade and immigration benefits which come with continental integration in favour of a more isolated and protectionist policy stance. Both these developments have the potential to impact global economy significantly, depending crucially on the scale and intensity of implementation by new leaders, while 2017 elections in Germany, France and the Netherlands may give us even further evidence of the structural shift in public sentiment that we have seen so far. In emerging markets (EM) we continue to see a number of structural changes, including those taking place in China, where the government is pursuing a host of supply-side reforms. In the past year however, China has stimulated its economy somewhat through fiscal and monetary measures, which has stabilised growth expectations for 2017. Furthermore, a number of EM economies, such as Russia and Brazil are emerging from deep recessions, which is likely to prop up global growth to some extent. Overall, we expect global GDP growth to improve moderately over the next year, with risks evenly balanced.

The election of Donald Trump in the US has increased inflation expectations considerably over the short term, which has seen yields rise across the developed world, with forward curves projecting a medium term tightening of monetary conditions on the part of most major central banks, albeit at diverging speeds. Federal Reserve officials, for example, have indicated that we may see up to three short term interest rate hikes this year, whereas European and Japanese officials are likely to pursue a more gradual approach. While emerging markets (EM) yields have risen, spreads over US Treasuries have narrowed over the prior two quarters, as EM capital inflows have been aided by greater risk appetite and a higher growth expectation. Across our portfolios, Oasis' global income exposure continues to favour high quality issuers with sustainable cashflows, which is likely to benefit in an environment of rising yields, as global monetary conditions normalize over the long term.
